COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL CONDUCT

BEFORE THE COMMISSION ON JUDICIAL CONDUCT OF THE STATE OF WASHINGTON

In re Matter of

The Honorable Judith Eiler Judge, King County District Court

CJC NO. 5198-F-136

MOTION TO RECONSIDER
MAJORITY COMMISSION DECISION

I, Introduction and Relief Requested

Respondent Judith Eiler ("Judge Eiler") requests the Commission on Judicial Conduct ("the Commission") reconsider its Commission Decision, issued on April 10 2009, in which it found Judge Eiler in violation of Canons 1, 2(A), 3(A)(3), and 3(A)(4) of the Code of Judicial Conduct ("CJC"). As a result of the Commission's decision, it will recommend to the Washington Supreme Court that Judge Eiler be censured and suspended for 90 days without pay. The Commission concluded that Judge Eiler's demeanor and behavior adversely impacted the integrity of the judiciary. However, it is also readily acknowledged that Judge Eiler's decisions were at all times fair, impartial, and based on proper factual and legal foundations. As it stands, the recommended punishment is disproportionally severe. Therefore, the Commission is requested to withdraw its recommendation of censure and suspension without pay, and instead issue only the sanction of censure. In the alternative, the Commission is requested to recommend the 90-day suspension be served with pay. A punishment of reduced severity is better proportioned to the violations found by the Commission, and will nevertheless further the goals of adequately enforcing the Code of Judicial Conduct.

II. Argument and Authority

During the Commission hearing of November 18-21 2008, a variety of evidence was presented both for and against Judge Eiler. Evidence from former litigants, court personnel, and attorneys purportedly demonstrated Judge Eiler's improper demeanor and behavior while in the courtroom. This evidence consisted of audiotapes, transcripts, and witness testimony. At most, this evidence was of limited context, suggesting that Judge Eiler's demeanor and behavior occasionally rose to a level the Commission finds inappropriate. At worst, this evidence was heavily biased, and primarily from former litigants who had violated the law, did not understand the pace of district court, and were unhappy with the outcome of their case.² In contrast, a variety of judges and attorneys, both active and retired, testified on behalf of Judge Eiler, demonstrating she is fair, efficient, and compassionate. These witnesses had no motive or bias, and based their opinions on years of experience with Judge Eiler and with the legal system. In addition, Judge Eiler personally testified, and either refuted the allegations against her or acknowledged where modifications to her behavior were necessary. Judge Eiler also described the negative media publicity she received as a result of the charges against her, and that her position teaching at Seattle University School of Law, a paid position, had been terminated.

In its decision, the Commission determined by clear, cogent, and convincing evidence that, under Count One of the Statement of Charges, Judge Eiler violated Canons 1, 2(A), 3(A)(3), and 3(A)(4) of the CJC. Canon 1 demands judges to "uphold the integrity and independence of the judiciary." No evidence presented against Judge Eiler suggested she exhibited bias in her rulings, or decided cases on improper factual or legal grounds. Canon 2(A) demands judges to "respect and comply with the law" in furthering the goals of judicial integrity and impartiality. No evidence presented against Judge Eiler suggested she failed to comply with the laws of Washington. Canon 3(A)(4) demands judges provide a "full right to be heard according to the law" to those with a legal interest in a proceeding. No evidence was presented to suggest Judge Eiler ever refused a litigant an opportunity to be heard. In any district court, in front of any judge, litigants will complain of not being afforded a full opportunity to tell their story. To punish Judge Eiler on this basis alone is unreasonable.

The remaining Canon, 3(A)(3), demands judges to be "patient, dignified, and courteous to litigants, witnesses, lawyers, and others within judges deal in the official capacity." Whether this Canon was violated was seriously contested by a multitude of evidence and witnesses. As Commission Member John McCarthy states in his Minority Opinion, the case against Judge Eiler is a demeanor issue: "This case is about [Judge Eiler's] tone and style in getting a lot of people through the pro se small claims and traffic cases in an efficient manner demanded by these dockets." It is not disputed that all of Judge Eiler's decisions have been fair, impartial, and factually and legally correct. As a result of the charges brought against her, Judge Eiler has already been subject to harsh media publicity, in addition to losing her paid teaching position at Seattle University School of Law. A censure and suspension of 90 days, without pay, is disproportionate to the violations found by the Commission.

III. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing argument and authority, the Commission is respectfully requested to reconsider its recommendation to the Supreme Court, and instead recommend only a sanction of censure. In the alternative, the Commission is requested to recommend the same sanction of censure and 90-day suspension, but with pay. A punishment of reduced severity is better proportioned to the violations found by the Commission, and will still further the goals of adequately enforcing the Code of Judicial Conduct.
